In this study, a series of sequential perfusions of isolated and mounted human term placental cotyledons was carried out in vitro. Human term placentae were chosen as their immunoreactivity for HLA-DR has previously been shown to be greatly reduced compared with human first trimester placentae. In this study, three preparations of human term placental cotyledons were perfused (n = 3) using an isolated and perfused organ preparation method. Human term placentae were collected at term delivery and prepared according to the isolated cotyledon technique. After perfusion, the lobules were fixed in 10% neutral buffered formalin and immunohistochemistry performed using a monoclonal antibody against HLA-DR, in order to assess the growth and development of the isolated term placenta in vitro. The cotyledons were perfused for a total of 45 h and incubated in organ culture for a further 14 h. Initially, HLA-DR immunoreactivity was detected in cotyledons within 2 h of perfusion. After 14 h, cotyledons were immunopositive for HLA-DR and they were intensely immunostained throughout the perfusion period. At 30 h of perfusion, cotyledons were positive for HLA-DR and were similar in morphology to those harvested at the time of cotyledon perfusion. 2d92ce491b
