\to use the county's SOPs. That's an important distinction. SOPs cannot be used to permit bad behavior; they can be used to regulate conduct that does not require a permit. Seems to me that the only way to ensure that a KISW letter can be read and understood is to allow the magistrate/clerk to read and understand it. And if one wants to be sure that an alternative to a public hearing is used (e.g., "by agreement of the affected parties"), then the alternative should be open to the public. He's a great guy. He listens, he's fair, and he doesn't take crap from anyone. The problem is that the way he goes about his job is like an angry, knee jerk reaction. He reacts without thinking. I don't think he's fair in all his decisions, but he's not as bad as the other idiots in Riverview and the Planning Department. I would much rather have a more experienced police officer who had the time to do their homework and consider the facts of each case rather than quick-fire decision, but it is what it is. Since I started reading these blogs and commenting on them regularly (because I found it a way to have a voice and a hand on some of the issues I care about), I've noticed the only times I've been completely satisfied with the way the law is applied are times when the person enforcing the law (or not enforcing the law) was no more than a fair and honest guy who did his best with the information available. It makes me a lot happier that the people who are in charge are in favor of the constitution, and understand that you can not take an amendment out of context without it being interpreted differently than you intended. I can not complain when I am getting a thorough and dispassionate look at the law, and I don't have to wait for the cops to be unwashed screw-balls. When one looks at his/her government and the people who are supposed to be protecting and enforcing the law, it would seem to be the direction they are taking. The city council is understaffed, under-funded, and as a whole, a bunch of slack-asses. There is nothing that a police officer can do in that department that would have even a marginal impact on the
