Category:Digital audio workstation software which create a contractual right of action on the part of the holder. A general release absolving the one who discharges the obligation from any and all liabilities, whether legal or otherwise, does not create a right of action against another. He cannot be held liable for the default of his employer. He cannot be required to pay damages for the default of the other. It is true that he, in this case, is liable for the contractual liability of the one who discharged the obligation. A fortiori, if the employer be in default and the discharge of the obligation by the other be based on his own liability, the third party is released as to his own liability as well as that of the employer. (Cf. 45-5-24, N.M.S.A. 1953; Wigmore on Evidence (3d Ed.) 974; Restatement of the Law of Torts (1939), 953, 954.) [12] In the instant case, although the defendant did not plead the release or set up any affirmative defense based thereon, the evidence submitted is such that the release was part of the case. The release was filed and marked for identification as an exhibit in the case. Plaintiff introduced evidence that by the release, the defendant was absolved from any and all liability of any and
