When you develop a brand identity, you should pay attention to not only your logo but to the overall look and feel of your product. Take a look at the examples of Coke and Nike. They look similar and they have similar colors. This is because they both focus on a similar concept and use similar colors to express that concept. Nike focuses on their athletic pursuits, while Coca Cola is associated with a refreshing drink. When these companies want to change their brand identity, they often use a new logo to represent the new concept. If you want to develop a brand identity, you should start with your logo. Your logo is a reflection of your business. It will be the first thing people see when they're looking at your company's website or when they pick up your product at the store. It's therefore important to think about how your logo looks when you're choosing it. It's good to know the different parts of your logo as well. For example, if you're designing a logo for a company that sells clothing, it might be a good idea to focus on the elements that you feel best express your brand. If you're designing a logo for a company that sells automobiles, you may want to focus on the elements that you think reflect your company's ideals. Once you've designed your logo, you want to make sure that it's something that fits with the overall feel of your business. If you're designing a logo for a company that sells educational toys, you may want to make sure that your logo is fun and has colorful characters on it. Your logo shouldn't be all serious and businesslike. It's also a good idea to pay attention to the colors that you use in your logo. If you're designing a logo for a company that sells toy trucks, you may want to use yellow. Yellow is a very exciting color that shows people something fun and bright. When it comes to brand identities, it's
