The two editors (Mode Editor and Builder) are different. The Mode Editor is the definition language that can be used to create or update the objects of a project. The Builder is the editor where the program runs. The Mode Editor is essentially the same as the old mode editor but the Builder has been changed as well. There is also a wizard to allow you to edit configuration files to change the behavior of the software. The file is available in Microsoft® Windows and MAC OS. Step 7 Professional V12 consists of 2 identical editors: Step 7 has the MODE editor and the Builder, while Step 7 Professional has the MODE editor and the Step 7 Builder. Because of the MODE editor being identical, the same functions and features are available in both editors. However, because the Builder is different, the UI is different in both versions and in this case the simple difference in functionality is quite annoying. In the Standard version of the software, the step 7 builder will run the simulation or the step 7 execution. This editor will have all the stuff you need for the step 7.
