The development of a rapid and reliable diagnosis of tuberculosis is essential for early detection and prompt treatment. Here, we report the mass spectrometric analysis of four key proteins from the cell wall of Mycobacterium tuberculosis that are known to play a role in the pathogenesis of tuberculosis, including two adhesins (Mce1 and MurF) and two proteins involved in lipid metabolism (TesA and Pks13). These proteins are unique to the cell wall of M. tuberculosis, and they show a high level of expression during the logarithmic growth phase of M. tuberculosis in vitro. Combining our results with current proteome databases and gene expression databases, we identified specific biomarkers that could help in the diagnosis of tuberculosis. The application of this diagnostic approach to clinical samples indicates that proteomics could be used as a promising tool for diagnosis of tuberculosis.
