Existing tools allow a user to edit and combine components of a design to generate a more complex design. This type of software is typically designed to be used by engineers and technicians who design components, such as an integrated circuit, by hand. A user might start with a simple drawing of a circuit to be designed. Then, the user would start combining the existing components into a new design by adding or removing circuit paths, switches, or components. The user might also modify the type and parameters of components, such as by changing the resistance of a resistor. Although these existing tools are useful, they suffer from a number of shortcomings. One shortcoming of existing tools is that they do not allow the user to select which circuit paths to use in a final design. Instead, the user must manually delete circuit paths that do not fit with the desired end result. Further, the tools do not allow the user to easily insert or change the type of components.[Problems of health of pilots and flight attendants in Russia: analysis of data from the "Evaluation of a state of health of pilots and flight attendants at different airlines" project]. Objective. To analyze the results of the 'Evaluation of a state of health of pilots and flight attendants at different airlines' survey and draw the lessons for improvement of the air transport system. Material and methods. The results of the study conducted in 6 regions of Russia in the period 2011-2014 were obtained. The study included the largest number of air transport personnel (PTs, pilots, and flight attendants). Main indices were the frequency of the prevalence of pilots' diseases. Assessment and estimation of the efficiency of the medical care was carried out based on the frequency of diseases of pilots and their rate of leaving the profession, based on
