What's New In HandyPad?

HandyPad - an app with a useful and handy plus - is an easy-to-use tool to take notes anywhere and anytime. With HandyPad, you can take notes without paper, a notebook, or writing on a screen. HandyPad allows you to keep your notes at any place from any device, a smartphone, a tablet, or a PC. Notes can be kept in HandyPad in multiple ways. Notes can be saved as images, web pages or text files. * NOTE: Text cannot be imported and exported from HandyPad. * NOTICE: HandyPad does not access any of your phone or tablet's data, but allows you to send data by email. You'll need to sign up for this service (which is currently in beta). If you use other apps on your smartphone or tablet that are password-protected, contact your phone or tablet manufacturer or carrier to see if HandyPad could require a passcode, device administrator or access to other data on your device. * WARNING: HandyPad is a beta-stage program in early development stages. Please send your feedback to handypad@handypad.com. Screenshots: I like to think of Handy Pad as a note-taking app for stupid people. So I was reviewing the site and saw there was a link to enter your zip code and it said under the new feature "search by Location" which I clicked on. The first screen or two of the app are all about the search. By clicking to the left you can see where you are on a map. On the upper right hand corner of the map it says "Add your location to your notes", which is where the idea to add your location comes into play. Your location will be automatically added to any note you write. Just like any other app on the Mac, you can turn off the note taking with a button that looks like a trash can. That will also turn off the location information. You can also see that there are other people who have taken notes while at your location on their note, but it seems that I cannot delete anyone else's notes, only my own. Once you finish a note you can close out of the app. However, if you are like me and add your location to every note you write, you will end up with hundreds of notes. You can now search in Handy Pad by using the search button at the top of the
