Hepatitis C and B are among the most common liver diseases worldwide. The prevalence of these diseases is increasing. Currently, a wide range of interferon-based and immune modulator treatments are available for both chronic hepatitis C and B. However, many patients are intolerant of or do not respond to existing therapy. Statins have demonstrated antiviral activity in patients with chronic hepatitis B. A recent trial that compared nelfinavir plus colchicine to nelfinavir plus placebo showed that the addition of colchicine increased the rate of sustained virological response in patients with chronic hepatitis B. Another study that investigated the effect of fluvastatin on the expression and activity of hepatitis B surface antigen-producing cells also showed that fluvastatin decreased hepatitis B surface antigen expression in culture and that this effect was stronger than that of simvastatin.

There is also evidence of the efficacy of statins in patients with chronic hepatitis C. Q: Are these monkey images allowed by no copyright law? These monkey images in an image collection on his web site link to a copyright holder? I want to make a 3D model of the monkey, but first I want to understand if it is allowed to reproduce it freely online without paying for it. A: If it's a copy of a publicly-distributed image, which is by definition an 'Unoriginal work', then it's copyrighted. This is most commonly true of royalty-free images, like those found in Google's stock assets. The original copyright holders have said the image is publicly available for such purposes. If you want to legally use it, you need to apply for permission from the copyright holder. The only company (that I can think of) that might give you permission is Far Future Enterprises. But that permission won't be given without payment. Ultrasound-guided transrectal prostate needle biopsy and tumor sampling by cytology. Prostate cancer is a major clinical problem and a leading cause of cancer death in men. The main methods for early diagnosis of prostate cancer are a digital rectal examination and a serum prostate-specific antigen measurement. These measures are not very sensitive and have a high rate of false-positive results. Today, ultrasound (US)-
