The competition is ever-present, so Adobe releases updates to Photoshop almost monthly, providing new tools and options that make the program even more flexible and powerful. Along with the updates come new features, new tips and tricks, and improvements to efficiency. Saving Your Work To save your work, press Ctrl+S (⌘-S). This saves the current image and brings up the Save As dialog box, as shown in Figure 9-1. Figure 9-1: The Save As dialog box is where you save your work. After you save a file, it takes its place in the file hierarchy (the File Explorer view). Although Photoshop is a powerful image-editing program, every user needs to guard against overwriting accidently in their work by regularly saving their files. Saving simply brings up the Save As dialog box, which you open to save a new file. The dialog box offers several options for saving the file: • Save As: If you select Save As, you can choose a number of different ways to save the image. For example, you can save the image as a JPEG, TIFF, GIF, or PNG file, with a selection of resolution, bit depth, file format, and compression method. • New Document: If you don't want to save the image in a new file, you can choose to open the file in a new document. • Open: You can choose to open the image in its current file location or in a new location. • Save As: If you select this option, you get the Save As dialog box where you can select the destination for your new image. The options are the same that you get when you save in the dialog box. When you choose Save As, you should take steps to protect against unintentional overwriting of the existing file. The following steps walk you through the process: 1. Go to File⇒Save As or press Shift+Ctrl+S (Shift-⌘-S) to open the Save As dialog box. 2. Click the Add button to open a dialog box for selecting a location and file name for the new image. 3. If you want the file to be a copy of the current image, use the same file name. If you want to start over, choose a different file name. 4. Click the folder you want to save the image in.

Last week, we reported on a growing trend at a music festival in New Hampshire, a dangerous and bizarre 'karaoke' show. You see, complete strangers are performing karaoke at the festival for the audience at no cost, but of course, there's an ugly side to this fun act. Some of the young teens performing at the karaoke show were just there to watch and were asked to join in, just for a minute. In some cases, the performances were underage and they were forced to do karaoke at the festival, without anyone knowing. It's even worse than that, because people are literally sing karaoke in the street. They perform in the street and leave their songs on loop, without 'the artist' ever knowing about it. As one reported said, "he was walking back to his tent when he heard three people singing in the middle of the street so he walked back to see what was happening. When he approached the people he heard singing, he found out that the three of them were performing as the backing track for the music on the street. The artists were so low profile that no one ever knew they were performing." What's the big deal? There are all kinds of people performing at music festivals and some of them are pretty bad. We've seen live rap, and death metal, and plenty of terrible DJ shows. The only difference is that this is a karaoke show, and it's being spread across the social media and the Internet. Here's an example of the 'artist' singing in the street: So, you see, you can find tons of different kinds of people at music festivals performing all kinds of weird stuff, and you can expect that the festival organizers are well aware of who's doing what, and where they are. But, in this instance, these teens were asked to perform karaoke, but they were so low profile, no one knew who they were. This was a heartwarming example of a music festival, with tons of kids just trying to have some fun, and it turned ugly very quickly. Let's hope the organizers take this whole karaoke phenomenon to heart, and next year, establish some rules for who can and cannot perform at the festival. If everyone needs to be on their best behavior in order to be heard, then maybe there

It's [inaudible] because she thinks she deserves it, too." coming for your BITCHASS title," she said. And now there is a ladies' tag-team match to determine the number-one contender at Extreme Rules. You have no place with us. We're done. We're done being your friends. We're done being your team. We're done being anybody's team. We're done. We're done. We're done. … I don't want you in my life. I want you in Charlotte's life. I want her to be your best friend. I want to see you at her henna party. I want to see you at her baby shower. I want you to see her, baby."
