for class 12 Social Sharing David Suzuki said this week the Liberal government's decision to water down proposed climate change legislation was a 'disaster.' He says there will now be no cap-and-trade program, a major climate change strategy. (The Canadian Press) The federal government's attempt to regulate greenhouse gas emissions was a "disaster for the environment," a prominent environmentalist said Thursday, as Ottawa looks to implement less stringent climate change legislation. Liberal MP Peter Julian, who has been touted as a potential leadership candidate for the party, said the government's plans to repeal the Climate Change Act of 2005, the law that established a cap-and-trade system to reduce emissions, is a "disaster" for the environment. Julian appeared on CBC News Network's Power & Politics with iPolitics Editor Wendy Mesley. When asked if he had lost respect for Prime Minister Stephen Harper after the action was taken to repeal the Liberal legislation, Julian said he has lost respect for the prime minister, but not for Parliament. The Liberal bill would have required a four-year "cap-and-trade" system to reduce carbon emissions. Health and safety concerns cited On Tuesday, Environment Minister John Baird announced a review of climate change legislation, citing a number of health and safety concerns, and said Ottawa would not "stand by and wait for a perfect plan or legislation." Liberal MP Peter Julian said he lost respect for the prime minister after Ottawa's move to repeal the Liberal legislation. (CBC News) The government no longer plans to introduce the legislation by June 2013, but will move forward with a report for Parliament, he said. I think it was a disaster for the environment and I think it was a disaster for the economy. What a difference a day makes, another disaster for the environment, another disaster for the environment. What a week, what a month, what a year, what a decade. "The government is saying to Canadians, 'We think we can make this the perfect bill by the end of June, but we are simply not doing that,'" Julian told Mesley. 'A gift to the fossil fuel industry' The Liberal bill would have required a four-year cap-and-trade system to reduce carbon emissions by cutting greenhouse gas emissions five per cent by 2020. The Conservatives had vowed to repeal the Liberal climate change legislation, but
