Mtk Reader V1.0.0.169

in 1990, the center for disease control (cdc) hired a computer-assisted worker interface system to develop a program that could establish a system of certification and qualification. the resultant system was dubbed the coal mine epidemiology classification system (cmecs). eventually, a modified version of the cmecs was used by the surface mining control and reclamation act (smcra). the cmecs was developed by the cdc, which received a contract from niosh to continue development and use in the black lung benefits program in october of 1992. currently, this program is used to train b readers of the black lung benefits program and to certify b readers as being qualified to read ilo classifications of chest radiographs. this variant of the cmecs is based on the original cdc-developed version and is referred to as the cdc b reader program. the original cmecs software may be used to train a b reader. however, to do so will require a considerable amount of effort. in addition to the cdc (1995), a second version of the b reader program, the surface mining control and reclamation act (smcra) b reader program is now being developed by the labor department, office of surface mining, safety and reclamation. this version is based on the cdc b reader and is referred to as the niosh b reader program. the niosh b reader program is constructed using a customized version of the existing b reader program written in aspectj. to facilitate this customization, the builder class has been updated to reflect changes made to the existing builder class. the builder class is responsible for building a b reader instance.

the b reader program is designed to protect the health of those who are exposed to harmful dust or other dust-related illness. dust is certainly one of the main health hazards facing miners, and non-mining coal workers also can be exposed to coal and its products, such as coal fly ash and processed coal. the health risk posed by dust depends on many factors, such as the nature of the dust, the amount of dust, and the conditions under which the dust is generated. by observing the amount and distribution of dust, one can gauge the amount of dust that workers are exposed to, which in turn can provide an estimate of the health risk that workers face. also, with the help of a b reader, it is possible to evaluate the level of physical impairment or disability that a miner may experience from pneumoconiosis. if a miner has pneumoconiosis, the b reader identifies the presence or absence of the disease, and the reader also identifies the type of pneumoconiosis present. the reader can also determine the degree of impairment or disability caused by the disease. the reader class is the primary component of the b reader program. a reader's job is to classify the chest radiographs submitted by readers, which are coded as series of observations. because the b reader program is designed to train readers, the reader class is very important. when the reader has a chest radiograph to read, it must first be correctly classified. physicians who classify chest radiographs for certain federal surveillance programs may be required to be b readers. for example, in the niosh coal workers x-ray surveillance program, physicians who classify radiographs for the program are required to be b readers for the second and any later readings of each radiograph ( 42 cfr 37 ). the asbestos medical surveillance program (amsp), administered by the navy and marine corps public health center (nmcphc), requires that the second reader of each radiograph be a b reader. b readers also have important roles to play in epidemiologic research, government programs, and contested proceedings. 5ec8ef588b
