the game is set in a 2d side-scrolling view, similar to super mario 64 . all areas are easily recognizable as they are composed of similarly styled backdrops. the game features two major worlds: the world of color and the world of light. all worlds are accessible to the player at any time, but players must clear stages to unlock new worlds and play them. the world of light features players controlling mario in his light-colored form; mario's default outfit changes depending on the time of day, his light form being green on morning and blue on nighttime. the world of color features players controlling mario in his dark-colored form; the player's outfits are a combination of both day and night-time colors. to enter the light world, players must find all of the star power-ups located on each stage. the star power-ups are identical to the originals, except that they are all colored light blue and have a star on the top. the player is required to start the level with all three star power-ups. as the player progresses through a stage, a star appears on the end of the stage, indicating that the player has collected all three star power-ups. once this is achieved, the color of the star changes from blue to green, and the player enters the world of color. power-ups have also received improvements and alterations to their functionality. green shells can now be used while held in the player's hand; if used during a tail spin, they will slide in the direction of the player's direction of facing. the player's arm can be rotated clockwise and counterclockwise for exactly 5.23 seconds per rotation, in contrast to the 4.84 seconds of the nintendo 64 version of the game. the player's tail can also be moved in the same way, but it will not move once the player enters a tail spin. fireballs still have the same functionality as in super mario 3d world , but they now move faster and cover a greater distance. the cat forms now allow characters to climb higher. additionally, the form's claw dive continuously dives until the character touches the ground, similarly to super mario maker 2 , though it does stop eventually at extremely long distances. for characters in the tanooki suit, the window to perform a charge jump while crouched during a tail spin is now much smaller, and most attempts are cancelled out by a normal charged jump instead. it is also more difficult to perform a long jump while using a tail spin, as it is usually cancelled with a normal long jump.

one of the biggest changes between this version and the game boy versions is that there is now a main hub (a field with plessie and 2k mario) once you beat fury bowser. instead of having to go on random islands to collect giga bells to fight fury bowser, you fight him on the main map and you go to different islands to get more giga bells. you also no longer have to fight worry bowser at the end of the game. you can see the old version of the game in the game boy version comparison. it is worth noting that on the game boy versions, both versions are named "super mario 3d world arisindo". in this version, the game only has one extra power-up, the super mushroom. after you defeat fury bowser at the end of the stage, you can use it to give yourself more time for the next stage. however, if you're out of time, fury bowser will be revived. the only difference is that you never need to fight him anymore. once you start the stage, you start with a super mushroom, but you have to find the mushroom in a special spot (it is located by the portrait of the cat who killed the mushroom in the last level). the game runs at 800 x 480 with 2d graphics, at a frame rate of 60 frames per second. the game features "visual fx", hd-style textures that add realistic elements such as depth and lighting. the game features on-screen readouts, 4 player-controlled characters, a fully featured plot-driven plot, the first and only super mario 3d land game to feature only four-player multiplayer, and the only super mario game released on the nintendo 3ds to offer a wide variety of playing styles. additionally, the game features a "plot master" mode that lets players freely traverse through the game with the characters without having to focus on the plot at all. the 4 player mode supports up to four players with nintendo-recommended connectivity via local wireless. the game supports four player multiplayer for up to four players with nintendo-recommended wi-fi multiplayer. players can also use the wii u gamepad to play with a second player locally or on the nintendo wi-fi connection [1] online. super mario 3d land also introduced four new courses: "six bridges canyon", "big sky country", "snowflake valley", and "country road". new costumes were added for mario, and the "pipe carrying cat" and "cannon armed cat" costumes of the italian cat luigi series are also included. [2] additional styles of each character were made, in addition to eight new playable characters and three new "hero" characters. players have the ability to return to the new super mario bros. series and play the regular super mario bros. and super mario bros. 2 stages. the heroes from the game & watch feature reversi (a.k.a. tetris) while they appear in "hero mode". certain tracks are unlocked after completing the corresponding difficulty level of the 8 included courses. if all three nintendo-recommended power-ups are collected, a super coin can be turned in at the museum to unlock bonus courses, "hero mode" stars and power-ups, with only "hero mode" returning characters available at the time of unlock. the new course "snowflake valley" is an indoor version of the underwater course "snow way" and features a new route: the "snowman showdown". each of the 10 courses is set around a dedicated castle, and unlock the corresponding town's castle when they are completed.
